Live Webinar

Event #66999km

Program Description: Without question, the COVID-19 global pandemic has had a significant impact on children, adolescents, and families across North Carolina. Key indicators of mental health and well-being suggest that children and adolescents are experiencing declines in mental health and academic performance and have inadequate access to services that support their complex needs. How can the service provider best understand how children and youth have been affected by the pandemic, and how can they respond effectively as human service professionals?

This presentation will review what is known about the current state of child and adolescent mental health in North Carolina and will link this to policy and practice applications for our everyday work. Participants will explore how the pandemic highlighted existing health disparities for children and families with marginalized identities and link this to a need for advocacy work within North Carolina. Finally, the importance of remaining resilient as professionals amid a challenging practice landscape will be discussed including how to implement lessons learned from the pandemic to drive practice innovations aimed at supporting child and family well-being.

Target Audience

This workshop will benefit mental health practitioners, educators, human service professionals, and community advocates interested in this topic.

Objectives

At the conclusion of this educational activity, participants should be able to:

- Describe the current research on mental health outcomes for children and adolescents in North Carolina amid the COVID-19 pandemic.
- Explore human service policy and practice implications for responding effectively to impacts of the pandemic on children, youth, and families.
- Examine “lessons learned” from providing human services to children and families over the past two years.
- Identify innovations in policy and practice that may serve youth and families in the coming months.
- Highlight strategies for supporting personal and professional well-being for providers strained by navigating changing practice landscapes secondary to the Pandemic.
